short session, especially now that this atmosphere has been created by all parties to the situation. There are different ways of approaching the current situation. You could take the approach of LB 1405, which basically is a ban on the use in any way of aborted fetal tissue. I mean it is unlawful for any person to engage or participate in the use of aborted fetal tissue, that is the approach of LB 1405. I suppose, on the other end of the scale, you might say we should leave it wide open. But I doubt that there are very many people in this Legislature, if any, who would want to take that approach to this very sensitive and important subject. I would suggest to you that there is a third and middle approach, that a total ban is not appropriate, essentially for two reasons. One, because great good can come from the use of this material; and, two, because the law is now and can be further structured to ensure that this use of the material will in no way encourage abortion. To me that is the critical principle in this whole debate, can the law be structured so that abortion is in no way encouraged? And, if it can be, then so long as there is the potential for great good on the other side, then maybe a compromise ought to be made. But that question was the most important one for me, can we be sure that the law will in no way allow the encouragement of abortion? And to that end, I think there are several things we need to look at. It is a broad question. First of all, we want to be sure that there can be no trafficking for profit in any way with respect to fetal material. And secondly, we would want to be sure that there is no use of the material if equally useful alternatives exist. And thirdly, we would want to be sure that extremely high ethical standards are set in place and maintained. I think those things can be done to everybody's satisfaction, except those who, of course, philosophically believe that no good can come from what they perceive to be an evil. But with respect to trafficking for profit, let me tell you...let me just go a little ways, as far as I can in five minutes, and begin to tell you how the law is developing and how it can be developed further. With regard for trafficking for profit, I passed out to you a copy of the federal law with regard to trafficking for profit. It says, it shall be unlawful for any person to knowingly acquire, receive or otherwise transfer any fetal tissue for valuable consideration, if the transfer affects interstate commerce. Well, that...there you have the protection
